TOPIC

Employee Retention: Lessening Your Training Load and Your Injury Risk By Robin Elston, Elston Consulting

One key to an injury-free work place is having well trained employees committed to performing their work safely. It's the job of managers to create a work place culture conducive to maximizing employee commitment. In this presentation Robin Elston of Elston Consulting will outline the most important factors in building a positive work place culture. Some of them will surprise you!

Three Objectives of Program

1. How to Increase Employee Engagement
2. Seven Essentials for Effective Management
3. Three Cultural Aspects Younger Employees Need

by Robin Elston of Elston Consulting

With degrees in Chemical Engineering and Business, Robin spent her first fifteen years after college working in engineering, manufacturing, and human resource management in a Fortune 500 Company. In 2001 she left a great job to follow her passion and started Elston Consulting. She has since worked with hundreds of organizations to grow stronger leaders, resolve issues, and improve productivity and results across the US, and in Europe and South America. She has a unique ability to use humorous relatable examples. Robin lives in Celina with Steve, her husband of 20+ years and their five children.
